Summary of Duties  A Public Information Director plans, develops, and administers a comprehensive public relations, advertising, and information program, for a City department or a major city-wide program; advises management of the potential public relations effect of proposed actions; applies sound supervisory principles and techniques in building and maintaining an effective work force; fulfills affirmative action responsibilities; and does related work.

Distinguishing Features  A Public Information Director uses a comprehensive knowledge of the plans and goals of a City department or major City program to direct a staff in the educational and promotional public relations work for a Department which has significant public relations impact or a major City-wide project or program which has extensive public relations requirements. A Public Information Director has considerable initiative in developing public relations campaigns and programs and solving problems. An employee in this class works freely within the limits of established departmental policy and general directives from top management. A Public Information Director exercises independent judgement in advising management on public and community relations matters. A Public Information Director, as a bona fide supervisor, performs the full range of supervisory activities. These include applying discipline, processing and resolving grievances, and evaluating employee performance. This class differs from that of a Principal Public Relations Representative in that the latter supervises a small group of professional and clerical employees engaged in planning and administering a limited departmental public relations program or a portion of a larger program.

Examples of Duties  A Public Information Director:

* Advises management on the potential public relations effect of proposed policies and actions.
